

Education Innovation Laboratory
at Harvard University

FULL-TIME PRE-DOCTORAL FELLOWSHIP POSITION AT HARVARD 2018-2019

Dr. Roland G. Fryer, Jr., Faculty Director at the Education Innovation Laboratory at Harvard University (EdLabs), is looking to hire several pre-doctoral fellows. Dr. Fryer is looking for graduated students to work with him for two years* on topics of economics, inequality, and race in America. Fellows will be responsible for organizing and analyzing data, drafting and editing research papers, and developing presentations and research proposals, as well as other tasks as necessary. In addition, EdLabs fellows typically attend classes and seminars at Harvard. The program thus serves as a good bridge between college and graduate school for students interested in economics and statistics. Applications are being accepted on a rolling basis.

Dr. Fryer is the Henry Lee Professor of Economics at Harvard University, Faculty Research Fellow at the NBER and recipient of the 2015 John Bates Clark Medal and the 2011 MacArthur Fellowship. Recent results from Dr. Fryer's work have been published in the Quarterly Journal of Economics, American Economic Review, and have been the subject of articles in The New York Times and The Economist.

Applicants should send a detailed cover letter, current CV, complete transcript, and one academic reference to jobs@edlabs.harvard.edu.

*This position is a one-year appointment renewable for the second year based on funding and, as always, performance.

Cc: Brad Allan, EdLabs Chief of Staff
ballan@edlabs.harvard.edu